JETWING SURF

POTTUVIL, EAST-COAST, SRI LANKA

On the eastern edge of the teardrop-shaped island, an uncharted coastline separates our verdant lands from the pristine waters of the Indian Ocean. This harmonious relationship with nature is a story of complementary coexistence, effortlessly brought to life at our cabana resort in Pottuvil Point, a serene hideaway near the celebrated beaches of Arugam Bay. The eastern home of Sri Lankan hospitality is a prime example of luxurious eco-tourism. Designed by the upcoming architect John Balmond and inspired by the intricate sea shells that rest upon the unspoiled beaches, natural structures made of wood, woven coconut palm leaves, and dried illuk grass welcome guests into a truly Sri Lankan environment, named after a world-famous pastime that has drawn travellers to the neighbouring waves for decades.

CABANA

An iconic symbol of luxurious eco-tourism on our eastern coastline, the 20 cabanas at Jetwing Surf are sustainable beachfront spaces that welcome you to indulge in coastal comforts. Rustic on the outside yet contemporary on the inside, each bedroom is an evolving testament to Jetwing's architectural signature of tropical modernism found across Sri Lanka. Thatched roofs complement the sustainable construction as a resourceful method of shade, along with the use of woven coconut palm leaves and dried illuk grass, which surround plush beds and two large sofas. For a true seaside experience, each cabana also features an outdoor deck complete with a large canopy umbrella, two cosy summer beds, and a table with two chairs for pleasant afternoon lounging, or even to marvel at the spectacular sunrise every morning.
